

Killarnée Targa South West: allowing people to live their dream

Crews are getting their first experience of the tarmac roads in the South West Region of Western Australian with Killarnée Targa South West kicking off this morning.

For many of these crews it is the opportunity to live a dream and experience tarmac rallying for the first time.

"We wanted to make sure that interested crews whose vehicles might not quite meet all of the CAMS regulations have the opportunity to experience the thrill of tarmac rallying," Killarnée Targa South West Event Director Bob Schrader said.

"All the vehicles have been approved by CAMS and the goal is that these competitors will consider modifying their cars to comply with the regulations and then participate in events such as Quit Targa West and other CAMS tarmac rallies," Schrader continued.

Being run for the first time in 2010, Killarnée Targa South West is a non-competitive, timed event which is also providing existing crews the opportunity to shakedown vehicles and get more time in the car.

"Our goal is to provide a highly enjoyable event for Classic and Modern vehicles where the whole 'spirit of the event is centered on taking part and the enjoyment of the thrill of the open road in a controlled environment," Schrader added.

Based in Pemberton and the Shire of Manjimup Killarnée Targa South West is also going to bring the thrill of tarmac rallying to new fan base.

"We have already received fantastic support from the local community and expect them to get into the motorsport mood over the weekend with plenty of other local activities and entertainment taking place in and around Pemberton," Schrader said.
